

Dr Sayeh Heidari Nejad graduated from Gilan University of Medical Sciences in Iran with a medical doctorate. She furthered her medical career in Australia and is currently a General Medicine Advanced Trainee Registrar at Fiona Stanley Hospital, under the Royal Australian College of Physicians (RACP). She has a special interest in hypertension and general nephrology.

Dr. Nejad has completed a Master of Philosophy in Public Health at Curtin University and works as a Clinical Research Fellow at the Dobney Hypertension Centre at the University of Western Australia. She has published several papers and is actively involved in multiple large national and international multicentre clinical trials that assess the impact and safety of novel pharmaceuticals and renal denervation procedure on blood pressure, metabolic syndrome, and chronic kidney disease.